

MLA Citation Quick Tips

MLA stands for the Modern Language Association. This format is most commonly used in the liberal arts and humanities field. This guide is based on the MLA 9th Edition updated in 2021.

What is a “Works Cited” page?

- Your Works Cited page is the MLA equivalent to the bibliography or references page used in differing formats. This page is where you include your citations, and put them in alphabetical order by author, so that your reader can find where the source you used originated.

Common elements of all MLA citations:

- 1.) Author
- 2.) Title of Source
- 3.) Title of Container
- 4.) Contributors
- 5.) Version
- 6.) Number
- 7.) Publisher
- 8.) Publication Date
- 9.) Location

- Note: Not ALL of these are in everything that you cite. Use it as a template to know what comes when if you have it. If you do not, then move on to the next element.

Dissecting an example:

Clark, Kim. "Can School Reform Ever Really Work?." U.S. News & World Report, vol. 147, no. 1, Jan. 2010, p. 23.

- Note: According to the 9th edition of MLA the city of publication is not necessary on works written after 1900. So, although you may include the city of publication on some works, it is not necessary.

What’s a DOI? And, do I need it?

- DOI stands for Digital Object Identifier. These are usually found in academic journal articles. The DOI acts as a quick and easy way to locate a published source on the web because every number is unique, and it can be used in place of the URL for articles found online.

Do I need to include the URL?

- MLA’s 9th Edition does recommend that you include the URL in the Location portion of your citation. When writing the URL in your citation, you can omit “http://” or “https://” to save space. If you include a DOI in your citation, you do not need the URL (unless your instructor says otherwise).
